DEDICATION

Now that you have skimmed through this annual, have seen your picture, looked at the different sections of the book, and have turned to this page, we hope that you will take a few minutes to read it.

When the time came for the dedication to be made, a particular question arose as to whom it would be dedicated. Would it be fair to give this honor to one person or group? Those who might possibly have qualified had already had an annual dedicated to them, and this was the last Crucible of Bay City Junior College. It had to be dedicated to something special, different. Should it be to an idea? a principle? the past? What? We could not decide.

When the last page, page 232, was pasted up, we found what we would dedicate the book to - to what those two students represent. The triangle that is formed by the poem, the tower, and the couple is more than just geometrically apparent. It is a triangle with depth, its base is in the past, its apex in the future, and the couple in the present. The ideal that they represent is an old one, reborn with every generation - no matter how the present manifests itself, no matter what pains and fears were in the past, as young people we have the duty and ability to hammer out as best a future as possible with the remolded tools that our fathers used. The future is a blending of the past with the present. The past we were given, the present we are taking, the future we must make.

Marlene Waltman

this i shall attain sane, yet crazed by this obsession,

i live in great dispair.
hoping vainly to eject this shell which has encrusted my mind.
invisible-yes. only i can know
the sadness it entails me.

shunning all human life, i have indeed committed a great felony but i am not comparable to their ways. i seek only solitude;
away from the wretched obvious.
alone, with no complexity.

don't try to understand or love me-
love it cruel.

go on living your burdened lives.
i desire only that which i have-no more. leave me
to be alone. simplicity is my goal.
this is shall attain. go now-you must not see my tears.

Collegiate Vogue

Dear Deary
July and August
were wonderful months;
we didn't waste a minute
of them, as you can see.....
we met new people and new fashions.

SEPTEMBER

Dear Diary

Classes began this month and the teachers were prepared! It took quite a bit of study to cope with the situation.

Barb MacKenzie: Blue raincoat with new collegiate corduroy collar.

John Muir: shawl collar 100% lambswool sweater with leather lace ties over cotton sheno slacks. Barb Butler: a co-ordinated skirt a wesket of gold tone plaid, 100% wool with a gold dacron and cotton blouse featuring burnt wooden buttons. Lorna Buddenbaum: Bernard Altman died-to-match flannel skirt and pale pink sweater. Wm. Hersem in fur blend sweater over cotton sheno slacks. Clothing compliments of Oppenheim's

Bonny Nash: a small wool tweed coat with fashion fur collar.

NOVEMBER

Dear Diary

This was the big month for Presidential candidates. We held a mock election in school and it soon became apparent that R.N. and J.F.K. weren't the only males that interested the female voters.

The Arts

One night when the moon shone bright in the sky,
And the stars in the heavens twinkled on high;
While Rome in her grandeur across the sea slept,
A slave in the north part of Africa wept.

The tears trickled down his thin little cheek
As they had in the past, week after week.
His name was Androcles - a name he thought brave -
A name he thought gallant - but the name of a slave.

His heart - how it sorrowed! His heart - how it bled!
He could stand it no longer, so that night he fled.
For hours and hours ran the brave little slave,
'Till before him he saw a large, dark cave.

His exhausted body fell down to the ground
And he slept with a sleep that was peaceful and sound.
For at last he was free - not bound any more.
But then he was startled by a loud fearsome roar.

Androcles prayed and prepared for his death
For there - right before him, he could feel its breath -
Was a lion, whose eyes were reflecting the moon.
And whose teeth, Andy thought, would sink into him soon.

Then Andy was much surprised to have learned
That the lion's loud roars into whimpers had turned.
Right up to Andy limped the great tawny beast;
The thought to kill Andy was not his in the least.

Androcles and the Lion

He stared right at Andy with sad, big, brown eyes;
Then Andy discovered the cause of its cries.
For there was a thorn lodged deep in its paw,
And the lion wished Andy the same to withdraw.

As the stars in the sky made way for the morn,
Androcles tenderly withdrew the thorn;
And for ever and ever, from that moment on,
The two loved each other more than father loves son.

They both lived together without any fears;
The cave was their home for almost three years
But then this strange friendship was brought to an end
When Androcles left his dear feline friend.

For Androcles longed for his home 'cross the sea,
But he vowed to the lion that his love would e'er be.
And so back to Rome a trip he did make -
Alas! For poor Androcles, this was a mistake!

For before he could even cross over the sea
He was recognized and taken into captivity
Andy was sentenced to provide a day of sport
By fighting the lions before Caesar's court.

Mike Garsticki

It was not long 'till the trumpets did sound
And a great, hungry lion at him did bound.
Andy did not even try to act brave,
For he preferred death to life as a slave.

The crowd was now standing, expecting the kill,
But all of a sudden, the crowd became still!
Androcles remained crouched in his place -
Then he felt something soft lick the side of his face.

The lion - the feline friend he had left -!
Androcles lovingly embraced him and wept.
The crowd was now cheering with a deafening roar;
They never had seen such a strange sight before.

Caesar considered Andy's deed to be bold
And so he was given a fortune in gold.
Wherever he went, Andy went with his pet,
(Which was the lion, if you have not guessed it as yet).

For the brave act of kindness that Andy had done
His scourge as a slave had now been undone.
He lived the rest of his life with his faithful feline friend
And with that touch of joy, I bring my tale to its end.

Went You Why

Went you why from me away?
Loved you did not me amore?
Changed has feelings why your me for?
Woman was another it?
Know I why, of course, of course,
Drove you me from I.
Loved wise I not, loved well I not.
Loved, yet loved, yet loved.
Dark the when all closes 'round,
Dawn the then longed much is for.
Now away have that you gone,
Love you I more still and more.

THE ANIMAL IN MEN

Men are said to have many characteristics that are often classified as animal traits. These can be traced through the phylums of a biologist's textbook and compared in this manner:

In the PROTOZA phylum are found primitive animals closely related to the one-celled plants. Some men, considered as the next-best thing to the lowest of animals, are almost as primitive and, unfortunately, also as numerous. They, too, are gregarious and often parasitic. They move through the days of life unaware and unappreciative of how they "got so far" on other's laurels. Their secret is to project themselves by putting their false feet forward and, when the opportunity arises, they glide into place when no one is looking.

The PORIFERA also typifies an interesting group—the all too common sponge. Both freshwater and marine inhabitants, they have bodies perforated with many pores to admit water through which they strain their food. Perhaps the human sponges are a step higher with many inspirations, aspirations, and outlets; but they are experts at straining human relations. The classic example is the brother-in-law who was invited to spend a week-end at his sister's home and, then decides to spend the rest of his life there. The social sponge is familiar to most people for there is usually one in every crowd. They eat what you eat, drink what you drink, and cling like cloth to your lap of luxury—until they find someone a little bit better, like the "host with the most."

The COELENTRERATA, radially symmetrical with a central gastrovascular cavity and a body wall consisting of two layers of cells (the outer composed of stinging cells), remind me of those mixed-up bitter "kids" called juvenile delinquents. True jellyfish under their sarcastic shells; or, perhaps, they are just the immature and adolescent jellyfish who have no backbone, no moral concept of right and wrong, and nothing enabling them to sting back (CTENOPHORA) at their stinging environment.

In the PLATHELMINTHES phylum I find the worms, best characterized by hen-pecked husbands. They are often called suckers, probably because they have no digestive tracts that they can call their own by which they could stomach the issues or straddle the obstacles of life. Going one step farther into the phylum NERMEDA, one finds the typical playboy. Although the proboscis worms are almost all marine, playboys are found in all branches of the service. Their most remarkable device for catching prey comes from their mouth, and is popularly known as a "line." They usually possess the ways and means of catching prey and discarding it, and they frequently have a distinct pattern of circulating. They have no heart, a feeble brain, and plenty of nerve.

The NEMATODA are just more common, less remarkable, and fatter than the previously mentioned group.

The ROTIFERA (wheel animals) are the spokes-men type. Each of these characters is composed of almost exactly the same amount of intelligence and agree that, for them, further growth or beneficial repair is impossible.

The GASTROTRICHA, not unlike the Rotifera, are peculiar. They are the old bachelors (surely, the "brainiest" of the group).

The BRYOZOA is the overlooked thing of beauty in the animal kingdom. It is the ridiculed poet, secreting about himself a protective case of horny material into which he can hide when danger threatens. According to its characteristic shape, it could be a U.

The last phylum of the lower invertebrates is the BRACHIOPODA, commonly known as the lampshells and superficially resembling a clam. Many humans share their "attached to the tangible" way of living.

Moving on to the ARTHROPODA phylum, I found crabs with pincers and legs for walking; the centipedes and milipedes, who go to extremes when they start "legging it"; and the spiders, who are found in every man's backyard, but not even they can beat some people at spinning webs of gossip to tantalize their innocent prey.

The largest group of animals, the insects, are the least appreciated by man. Perhaps it is because within their ranks fit many of their uncharitable acquaintances:

- (1) people who are always chirping at others, the cockroaches;
- (2) enemies who eat away at your reputation, crumple your hopes, the termites;
- (3) those who get in your hair, like the lice;
- (4) or the bedbugs, who dig you the most;
- (5) the moths, who tear your garments of self-accomplishment;
- (6) the flies and mosquitoes, who make life as miserable as they possibly can;
- (7) then, there are the wasps and the bees who can smother you with honey and get a charge out of watching you lick it up while they plan how they can sting you tomorrow.

The MOLLUSCA phylum presents many interesting specimens for observation and scrutiny. They are the unsegmented, soft bodied animals usually covered by a shell, with a ventral muscular foot. The human snail is found in this group with a soft head that is no good for burrowing (no good for lending either). The octopus, (every girl has come up against a human octopus or two) has tentacles, well-developed eyes, and a peculiar hobby of watching submarine races. ECHINODERMATA, the sea cucumber, has a pickle of a personality in the human form. Commonly green, they change their inner feelings with the turn of the tide.

The last great phylum of animals, that to which all men belong regardless of thoughts, words and deeds, is the phylum CHORDATA whose members are distinctive in having a notochord, a dorsal hollow nerve cord, and gill slits. In the sub-phylum, UROCHORDA, are found saclike adults who often form colonies while their young are left on their own. Like the A.A.'s.

Birds are characterized by those feather-brained, long-beaked, neurotics who are constantly flying from one frustration to another.

Many other types of men can be described simply by giving them the same title as their animal models. There are people who look, hop, and croak like frogs those who drink like fish until they are inebriated to the gills; and sharks who victimize, beat, and cheat other drips who are all wet. Also, I find bosses who are dogs, boys who are wolves, men who are skunks, nuts who are squirrels, and the rest who are hogs.

Needless to say, these are only a few of the many types of men but the picture isn't entirely black. Fortunately, there is one type of human species who is relatively similar but shares none of these faults. Collectively, they are called "women"!

Death Call

Pat Coumans

Is it natural to fear
When threat of death is near?
Is it natural to wonder
When we hear the trumpet thunder?
Life so quickly ebbs away -
Can there be no other way?
Life is here so short an hour -
Then it fades, like wilting flower.

The Master Speed

No speed of wind or water rushing by
But you have speed far greater. You can climb
Back up a stream of radiance to the sky,
And back through history up the stream of time.
And you were given this swiftness, not for haste
Nor chiefly that you may go where you will,
But in the rush of everything to waste,
That you may have the power of standing still –
Off any still or moving thing you say.
Two such as you with such a master speed
Cannot be parted nor be swept away
From one another once you are agreed
That life is only life forevermore
Together wing to wing and oar to oar.

-Robert Frost
